Hearing God

In his book When You're All Out of Noodles, Ken Jones writes about a lesson he learned one day at the office.

When he walked into his office, he noticed something he had never seen before. It was round, about the size of a dessert plate, and it was plugged into the wall, giving out a constant noise. It wasn't a loud noise, just constant. What in the world is that thing? He thought as he stopped to stare.

He finally asked the receptionist about the device. She said, "It's an ambient noise generator. If it's too quiet in here, we can distinguish the voices in the counseling offices, and we want to protect their privacy. We bought the noise generator to cover the voices."

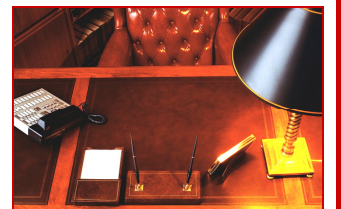

Her explanation made perfect sense to him, and he asked if it didn't have to be louder to mask the conversations.

"No," said the receptionist, "The constancy of the sound tricks the ear so that what is being said can't be distinguished."

Jones found this fact very interesting: one kind of noise to cover the sound of another. He thought that it's no wonder he strains to hear what the Lord says to him: the constancy of sound—little noises, soft, inward, ambient thoughts and fears and attitudes—tricks the ears of his inner man that masks His still voice.

God isn't silent. We just have trouble hearing Him because of the ambient sounds in our lives.
