From the Minister's Desk

Literally Fishing for Men

In July 2008, Bob Greene of Hallowell, Maine was having his morning coffee when he thought he heard someone calling for help. The cry of distress came for a man bobbing in the Kennebec River. Greene called 911, where the dispatcher told him to throw something to the man. He grabbed his fishing pole, cast out a line, and snagged the man's shirt with a fishing lure. He reeled him safely to shore, where the rescued man was immediately taken to a Portland hospital for further care.

Jesus said, "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men" (Matthew 4:19). If you aren't fishing, you aren't following. Just as Bob Greene fished for a man, we as Christians can follow his example.

First, be sensitive enough to hear the cry of people who need to be saved. Greene could have ignored the voice he heard. Listen! It is likely that someone is calling out to you for help.

Second, respond to the call for help. Change your priorities. Lay down your coffee cup, turn off your computer, miss your favorite television show, pass up going shopping and grab your fishing pole.

Third, throw out a line. Find a way to explain the gospel in a way the person will understand it. Know that you will be better equipped to help another understand by preparing yourself through Bible study. An excellent resource is Hillcrest Bible study classes.

Fourth, reel him in. Invite the person to church services and church activities in an effort to assist him in understanding why he needs to become a Christian. Fifth, provide proper follow-up. The rescued man wasn't left on the shore, but checked into a hospital. If your evangelism leads to the person's accepting His Word, help the saved person to get involved in Christian fellowship. Be his Christian mentor.
